Informed Consent to HIV Antibody Test*

HIV: Human Immunodeficiency Virus*

Before you receive an HIV antibody test, you must give your consent. This form explains the test and how the test results can be used. It should help you decide whether you want to take the test. Please read it carefully. Your HIV tester must go over this information with you. If you have any questions, ask. Please read all this information before you decide to be tested. If you want to be tested, please sign the back of this form.

What is the HIV Antibody Test?

It is a test that shows if you have antibodies caused by HIV in your body. HIV antibodies are a sign that HIV has entered your body. A blood sample will be taken from you and tested. If the first test shows that you have the antibodies, a confirmatory test will be done.

What does it mean if the test is Non-Reactive?

A non-reactive or negative test means you're probably not infected with HIV. It takes the body time to produce the HIV antibodies. It may be too soon for the antibodies to be seen in the test. If you recently had sex without a condom or shared needles with someone, you may want to be tested again in three to six months. Please talk to your HIV tester about this.

What does it mean if the confirmatory test is Reactive?

A reactive or positive confirmatory test result means you have HIV. It doesn't necessarily mean you have AIDS, but HIV is the virus that causes AIDS. It also means you could give the virus to other people. People who have HIV can pass the virus during sex or by sharing needles during drug use. A pregnant woman who has HIV can pass the virus to her baby during pregnancy or childbirth.

How will the test help me?

If the test is Non-Reactive (negative):

- Your HIV tester will discuss how to keep you from getting HIV in the future.

If the test is Reactive (positive):

- Your doctor can take better care of you by knowing your test result.
- You can learn about ways to stay healthy and new medicines that may help.
- You can learn how to avoid passing HIV to others.
- If you are pregnant, your doctor can give you and your baby special care and advice.
- Your test result is reported to the state health department using your name.

Do I have to take the test?

No. Taking the test is up to you. In most cases, you can't be made to take the HIV antibody test. If you don't want the test, you can still get medical care. Sometimes it may be harder for your doctor to give you the best care. If you want to take the test, you don't have to let anyone know your test result. You don't even have to tell anyone you've taken the test. You can find a testing site near you by visiting www.211ct.org.

Do I have to tell anyone my test result?

If you take the test, your result is private. Under Connecticut law, only the people listed on the back of this form may have the result. Please be sure to read the back of this form and ask your HIV tester if you have any questions. If your test is positive, your sex and needle sharing partners need to know. This is true for past and present partners. There is a special program that can help you tell your partners. If you are unable to tell partners yourself, they may be told, and your name won't be used.

What if I don't show up for my result?

By signing this consent form, you are giving permission for this agency to give your name to the Department of Public Health's Partner Services staff for the purpose of follow up and partner notification if you test positive. Partner Services can notify partners confidentially, without using your name. If you do not return for your result and your result is positive, DPH Partner Services staff may contact you within 36 months to share your result and offer support.

Should I tell anyone I've taken the test?

Who you tell is up to you. Something to consider is that some people who have HIV or have been tested for HIV have been treated unfairly. If you are discriminated against in a job, housing, public accommodation, or in getting credit, you may file a complaint with the Connecticut Commission on Human Rights & Opportunities. Call the Commission office in Hartford at (860) 541-3400 to find out the office that handles complaints for your area.

WHO CAN RECEIVE HIV TEST RESULTS?

Under Connecticut law, HIV antibody test results and other HIV information are private and may be given only:

1. To you (or a person authorized by law who agreed to the test for you);
2. To anyone you give written consent to get the test result;
3. To a health care facility (such as a hospital, blood bank or laboratory) that is giving health care to you or your child. HIV and AIDS information may also be recorded in your medical chart or records;
4. To a health care provider (such as a doctor or nurse) who is giving health care to you or your child;
5. To a committee or organization that reviews records in a health facility to monitor the care provided in that facility;
6. To insurance companies or government programs such as Medicaid if needed to pay for services you receive or for other types of claims such as a disability claim. (You may be able to pay for the test yourself if you don't want your insurance company to get your result.) If you are being tested for insurance, you can also choose a doctor or other health care provider who would receive your test result if it is positive;
7. To a person who gets a court order that gives them the right to your test result (this can only happen in special cases);
8. To a state institution (such as a correctional facility), where employees may have the information in special cases;
9. To a health care worker or other type of worker who is exposed to your blood (in limited cases, such as sexual assault);
10. To a medical examiner;
11. To a public health agency or public health authority, if permitted by law.

All these people are also required by state law to keep your result private. You can ask your doctor or health care provider if your HIV test result has been released to anyone.

I have read all of this form or it has been read to me, and I've discussed it with my doctor or test counselor. I have been told about the nature of HIV and have been told about how the virus may be passed from one person to another. I understand that testing HIV positive in Connecticut is reportable to the state health department and that if I test positive, the HIV test will be reported by name. If I do not return for my test result, the HIV tester will still report the result to the state health department.

I agree to take the HIV antibody test.
